

Congerstone is best reached from Br.47. An attractive village.

Shackerstone is the home of the Battlefield Line, a steam enthusiast's delight. A small museum on the platform is full of railway artefacts. Trains run weekends and Bank Holidays. The Rising Sun is just a few minutes walk away, food is served lunchtime and every evening but booking may be necessary for Friday and Saturday. There are good moorings just after the aqueduct and north of Br.52. The hill in the field behind the line of moored boats is the site of a motte and bailey castle.

The wooded section beyond Br.53 marks the start of Gopsall Park. The hall itself was demolished in 1951. Gopsall wharf by Br.58 was the last site used for loading coal on the canal.

Snaresstone lies above the only tunnel on the canal which is 250yds long but crooked.

There are moorings at the entrance, convenient for the Globe Inn which serves food.

After two more bridges the terminus is reached. There is water, refuse, sanitary station and winding hole.

A newly restored stretch of canal beyond the swingbridge was opened in 2010. 48hr. moorings here, ACA Gift Shop and slipway.

ASHBY CANAL ASSOCIATION

A Guide to the Ashby Canal

The Ashby Canal was opened in 1804 to convey coal and limestone from the extensive deposits in the Ashby Wolds. Although called the Ashby-de-la-Zouch Canal the original terminus was at Overseal just beyond Moira. An extensive system of tramways were built to carry the minerals to the canal.

An earlier plan to link the canal to the river Trent at Swarkestone was abandoned in the 1790's.

Among boaters the canal was fondly known as the Moira Cut. Coal was carried along the canal until the 1970's but now all the mines are closed. The canal is probably unique in the respect of being entirely rural throughout its length although encroaching housing and industry at Hinckley attempts, but does not diminish, this view.

The last 8 miles have subsequently been closed and infilled due to mining subsidence. Leicestershire County Council, working with The Ashby Canal Association and Ashby Canal Trust, are beginning to restore the section beyond Snaresstone. A length at Moira has already been rewatered and this extends from Donisthorpe to Bath Yard at Conkers Waterside.

We hope you enjoy your cruise along the 22 peaceful, lock free miles of the Ashby Canal. Like many canals built originally for horse drawn boats which unloaded only at recognised wharfs the Ashby, has for the most part, shallow sides which make casual mooring difficult. This guide is intended for those unfamiliar with the locality by suggesting suitable places for mooring and pointing out the shops and other facilities that may be found close by.

After entering the canal at Marston Junction you will notice that the bridges are made of local stone, this is a particular feature on the Ashby. The rural nature of the canal soon shows itself as you leave behind the housing and quarry workings.

Moorings by Br.5 are handy for The Corner House, a large friendly pub serving good food.

After Br.5 the canal enters a long narrow cutting through sandstone. It is difficult for boats to pass so go slowly and take great care. A mobile home park is on top of the steep sides. Look out for the Gnomes as you pass through.

There are good moorings after Br.6.

Burton Hastings can be seen on the high ground by Br.8. There is a telephone but no pubs or shop. The church dates from the 13c. Bridges come close together here as the surrounding fields open up to large scale arable farming.

A small wooded section marks the approach to Br.13 with the remains of an attractive old wall alongside the towpath.

The Lime Kilns public house on the A5 heralds the approach to Hinckley. Overnight moorings south of Br.15. There is water but no rubbish disposal here.

Some moorings are available by the pub garden and opposite but are not visible through the bridge and may be full, so stop and check first. Good food is available lunchtime and evenings.

New housing begins to encroach on the canal with industrial estates on the left and right.

By Br.16 the old Hinckley Arm is used by Hinckley Boat Club. There are moorings just through the bridge which are the closest for the town about 1 mile away. A selection of shops nearby include a butchers, PO, newsagents, grocer, general stores, chippy, Marstons pub and an excellent Indian restaurant.

There is a regular bus service to Hinckley after Br. 7.

Trinity Marina offers all services and a good pub with food, but may charge for mooring overnight.

Open fields all the way now towards Stoke Golding and Dadlington which are on the hills to the right.

The hire base at Br.25 has all services and the marina by Br.26 has a slipway and does repairs. There are good moorings between the villages after Br.27. In Stoke Golding there is a PO and general stores. The George & Dragon and the Three Horseshoes serve food.

At Br.34 Sutton Cheney Wharf is on the right. The Ashby Trip operates regular supper cruises and charter trips from the wharf and has a tea room/bistro and moorings on the landing stage, on the right.

It is a short walk to the Battlefield centre, the site of the Battle of Bosworth 1485. Another access is at Shenton, from the moorings a steep path leads to where Richard III met his death, the last English monarch to die in battle. The terminus of the Shackerstone steam railway is here, trains run on Sundays during the summer and over Bank Holiday weekends.

The canal then crosses the road to Shenton on a small aqueduct.

Market Bosworth is soon reached although the town lies about a mile away to the east. Moorings are just beyond the water point and winding hole. It is uphill all the way to this delightful market town with several good pubs and a restaurant serving food. Also an award-winning fish & chip shop. Market day is Wednesday. Among the usual array of shops there is also a chemists. There are no shops in any village beyond Market Bosworth, so make sure you are well stocked before continuing.

The open fields continue as the canal meanders its way northwards.
